DINING AT THE CASTLE

NOTCH8

With a luxurious and contemporary design inspired by the romance of travel in the 1930's, Notch8 Restaurant & Bar brings a new era of glamour to the lobby of Fairmont Hotel Vancouver. Named after a train's top speed, achieved only by the most skilled conductors, Notch8 Restaurant & Bar pays homage to the Fairmont Hotel Vancouver's storied history and legacy as a luxury hotel along the Canadian Pacific Railway. Featuring regional fare that includes new favourites and prized dishes, cocktails made popular during pre and post-prohibition times, as well as an extensive wine list. Open for breakfast, lunch, happy hour, dinner, lounge, weekend brunch, and afternoon tea. To learn more or to view menus online, please visit our website here.

IN-ROOM DINING

Linger a little longer, and enjoy Executive Chef Mike Reid's culinary delights from the comfort of our cloud beds. An extension of our classic menu from the Notch8 kitchen, the In-Room Dining menu is now available 24 hours a day. From breakfast delights, to late night snacks and everything in between, there is sure to be something to satisfy every craving.

THE HISTORY OF HOTEL VANCOUVER

The present Hotel Vancouver is actually the third hotel by that name. The first hotel, owned by the Canadian Pacific Railroad (CPR), opened in 1887. The original hotel was a four story 60-room wooden structure at Georgia and Granville Street. It was eventually torn down and replaced by the much larger, second Hotel Vancouver (also owned by CPR), which opened in 1916.

This second hotel was an imposing structure of 14 stories in the style of an Italian villa. Huge carved heads of bison and elk graced the exterior on the upper stories. The hotel became a focus for the city's growing social life and continued to attract a stream of noble visitors. Although gracious, the hotel was not well built and deteriorated structurally within a few short years of its completion.

In 1928, Canadian National Railroad (CNR) began developing a competitive hotel on the present site. Unfortunately, the depressed economy of the time forced CNR to halt construction in 1932 for five years. Finally CPR, whose own hotel was becoming too costly to maintain, and construction resumed. The new Hotel Vancouver was completed in time for the Royal Visit of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth. The official opening took place on May 25, 1939.

CANADIAN NATIONAL HOTEL 1930; HOTEL VANCOUVER
1916; FAIRMONT HOTEL VANCOUVER

During World War II, the decaying second hotel was taken over by the federal government; first as an administrative centre, and later as a hostel for returning veterans. In 1949 it was demolished, and today it is the site of the TD Bank Tower.

The third and present Hotel Vancouver was built at a cost of $12 million and took almost ten years to complete. It was the tallest building on the skyline and the green copper roof was quickly established as the well-known city landmark that it is still today.

Everything that went into the construction was the biggest and best of its time. Designed in French Renaissance style by John S. Archibald (succeeded by John Schofield upon the former's death), the Hotel's exterior was made of British Columbian stone from Haddington Island, the same stone used in the Province's Legislative Buildings. Throughout the Hotel, the grace and charm of the Renaissance era is reflected in sweeping marble staircases, spacious guest rooms and hallways. The decorative Montinello marble used extensively in the lobby, on staircases and pillars reportedly weighed 166 tons. The Hotel had the biggest switchboard in the city, the largest dining room and the most elegant furnishings to be found in any public building.

Polished brass railings and intricately carved stone facades on the exterior of the building add to Hotel Vancouver's charm. The most interesting figure carved in stone on the exterior is the head of Hermes, above the main Mercury) was messenger of the gods: god of wind, speed, trade, navigation, commerce, oration, manual skill, and – auspiciously – the god of travelers. Hermes is regarded as the patron of the Hotel and protector of all the guests who pass through our doors.

The present hotel was enormously successful during its early years, but by the 1960's it urgently needed renovation. Unwilling to spend money on a building it did not own, CP decided in 1962 not to renew its contract. CN contracted the hotel's management to Hilton Canada Inc. which supervised extensive modernization of the interior and construction of the parking garage. In 1983 CN resumed sole management. Finally in 1988, the hotel's ownership came full circle, as Canadian Pacific Hotels once again acquired the Hotel Vancouver.

In 1996, the Hotel Vancouver undertook more extensive renovations and transformed the lobby. A total of $12 million was spent on the renovations – the same amount spent on the entire construction in 1939! The ceilings were lifted, the carpets replaced and the 900 West Bar and Lounge added (now Notch8 Restaurant and Lounge).

A heritage building, the Hotel Vancouver represents both the gracious elegance of the past and the finest in modern conveniences. More than a century of gracious elegance and attentive service have secured Hotel Vancouver's reputation as the "Grand Hotel" of the city. 🦂

The hotel was officially opened by King George VI and Queen Elizabeth on May 29, during their Royal Tour of Canada. The Fourteenth Floor had been specially designed just for their stay. They also enjoyed a civic lunch in the ballroom during their visit.

Jennie Pearl Cox, a socialite who regularly attended luxurious events at the hotel, was killed in a tragic car accident. Since then, there have been numerous sightings of a lady in a red dress that seemingly disappears in front of them.
